

Table of Contents

Foreword	XXV
The beginning of the Alsos Mission and the failure of German physics
I The Fear of a German Atom Bomb	3
We overestimate the German scientific effort—and the Germans do likewise
II We Prepare to Investigate German Science	14
The task of the Alsos Mission
Radioactive wine
A polyp in his right nostril
III The Need for Secrecy	26
Nobody knew what we were after
How we went about our work
IV Operation Cellastic	34
What our French colleagues told us
A German technical intelligence organization
Dutch collaborators
The house in The Hague
V Operation Toothpaste	50
O.S.S. finds a German chemical expert for us
The thorium scare
Our first prisoner and his papers
The solution of the thorium secret
VI Operation Jackpot	66
The fall of Strasbourg
We capture our first scientists
Their papers tell everything
Experiments on humans
VII We Meet Some German Colleagues	77
Entering Heidelberg
Friend or enemy?
Notes on four different German scientists
VIII The Breakthrough	87
Our first German “pile” laboratory
Centrifuges, silk, and an old friend
Preparing for the final operation
We take their principal laboratory

IX	Operation Humbug	101
	Whom shall we take with us? The hidden papers A report by the Germans Heisenberg The last roundup of physicists Alsos in Berlin
X	Hiroshima and the German Scientists	128
	Flight to Frankfurt The reaction of the internees The new German theme song
XI	The Misorganization of German Science	140
	The Professor of Military Physics Peenemünde trouble Superior German Air Force Research The anti-physics physicists Physics is a weapon
XII	The Uranium Club	160
	The early decision to work in secret Visitors to the United States The Postal Minister The "coming-out party" Gerlach takes over What the German colleagues did not know
XIII	The Gestapo in Science	187
	Osenberg Gestapo reports The railroad switchyard Himmler's scientific interests The SS academy Rewarming by two women Pseudo-science and the dog
XIV	The Efficiency of German Industry	214
	Underground factories Slave labor The SS quarrels with labor and industry
XV	It Can't Happen Here	232
	The German mistakes The lessons for us
	Appendix: An Outline of the Uranium Problem	247
	Index	255

