

Contents

Preface	ix
Acknowledgments	x
Author biography	xi
1 Introduction	1-1
References	1-3
2 How many women are in physics?	2-1
2.1 Historical women in physics	2-1
2.2 High school physics/upper secondary physics	2-2
2.3 Current trends in women's participation in physics	2-3
2.4 College/tertiary education	2-4
2.5 Postgraduate education	2-4
2.6 Conclusion	2-4
References	2-5
3 What helps, what hurts: family and education	3-1
3.1 Extra-curricular and informal science activities	3-2
3.2 Early science education	3-2
3.3 High school physics education	3-3
3.4 Undergraduate physics education	3-5
3.5 Postgraduate physics education	3-7
References	3-9
4 What helps, what hurts: family and career	4-1
4.1 Choosing a job in physics	4-1
4.2 Leadership	4-2
4.3 Family and work/the balancing act	4-3
4.4 Resources	4-5
References	4-6
5 The view through rose-colored glasses	5-1
References	5-4

6	The glass is half-empty	6-1
6.1	The nature of science	6-1
6.2	Covert discrimination	6-2
	References	6-5
7	Closing thoughts	7-1
	References	7-2